Studying Societal Resilience at Home and Abroad

Dr. Meir Elran

With the cleanup from Hurricane Harvey still in its early stages and with Hurricane Irma plowing its way through the Caribbean aimed at the continental United States, now is a good time to think about societal resilience. In this Global Security Podcast, Mark Stout talks with Dr. Meir Elran of the Institute for National Security Studies at Tel Aviv University about his work on resilience. Dr. Elran, a retired Brigadier General in the Israel Defense Forces and former deputy chief of Israeli Military Intelligence discusses how resilience can be measured and its role in dealing with everything from natural disasters to terrorism.
