Blue and White chairman Benny Gantz, who endorsed the U.S. peace plan while in Washington, said Wednesday that he intends to bring it to a vote in the Knesset next week, the Times of Israel reported.

“This is a historic opportunity to draw Israel’s future borders,” Gantz during a speech at an Institute for National Security Studies conference.

“The peace plan is consistent with the fundamental principles outlined in the Blue and White’s platform. Next week, I will bring the entirety of President Trump’s peace plan, as unveiled yesterday, to the Knesset for approval.”

The move would parallel a vote on the peace plan in the Cabinet due next week as well, and it was not clear how the dual process would play out.

Gantz’s support for the Trump administration proposals was not shared by other leaders in Blue and White. Moshe Yaalon, head of the Telem faction, was reportedly troubled by the provisions for a Palestinian state and the unrealistic nature of the plan in general.
