

How do Israelis view the Gaza War after 300 days? Israeli public loses trust in government & IDF to handle war, hostages

Israeli security think tank publishes monthly survey tracking public opinion of leadership during the war

All Israel News Staff | Published: August 1, 2024

The Israeli think tank Institute for National Security Studies (INSS) published its most recent monthly survey on Monday, gauging public opinion on various aspects of the Iron Swords War (Israel's name for the Gaza War) initiated by the Hamas invasion on Oct. 7.

INSS has consistently tracked Israeli public opinion during the war, including public trust in the government and the IDF, hot political topics like ultra-Orthodox military enlistment, and relations between Jews and Arabs in Israeli society.

Tracking data over the last few months, with the first survey conducted in April, there appears to be a gradual decline in public trust in both the government and the Israel Defense Forces establishment as the war drags on into its tenth month.

•••

For the full results of the survey, click here.

For full article:

https://allisrael.com/how-do-israelis-view-the-war-after-300-days-survey-shows-decline-inpublic-trust-of-government-and-army-on-war-and-hostages